Reading

1. The tiny oil-rich Sultanate of Brunei sees ecotourism as a new means of adding money to its economy which is based mainly on oil, in an effort to attract one million tourists to its uncrowded beaches and unspoiled rain forests in 2001, according to the country's top tourism official.
 2. Tourism chief Sheikh Jamaluddin told reporters before a summit meeting of the 21-member Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum in Bandar Seri Begawan, Brunei's capital, that the event, the biggest of its kind ever hosted by the country, offers a rare opportunity to show Brunei's tourism potential. "Brunei is going to be a buzzing place, especially after APEC," he said, referring to plans to launch a year-long "Visit Brunei 2001" campaign Jan. 13 with a view to doubling the 500,000 tourists visiting this year.
 3. Brunei's economy is almost totally supported by oil and gas exports, and industry experts estimate oil reserves may only last 20-30 more years and gas reserves around 40 more years at current production rates.
 4. As part of efforts over the past decade to move the economy away from depending mainly on oil and gas, the government began paying more attention to the tourism sector around 1996. But it still accounts for only a small share of Brunei's gross domestic product.
 5. Jamaluddin called the rising unemployment in Brunei "a cancer" that could have serious results if not dealt with early. He added that attracting one million tourists could also create 11,000 new jobs in the country of only about 315,000 people.
 6. As one reflection of its enormous wealth, Brunei has been able to preserve its tropical forests, which are rich in flora and fauna, and cover 75% of its 5,769 square kilometer land area on the northwestern coast of Borneo, an island it shares with Malaysia and Indonesia.
 7. Brunei advertises itself as a clean, safe, politically stable and culturally rich tourist destination and a gateway to Borneo. It also has beautiful mosques, shipwrecks for those who love diving, a Disneyland-style theme park, the world's largest palace and the world's largest water village, where 30,000 people live in houses built along the Brunei River.
 8. Jamaluddin said, "People never imagine Brunei as a place to visit. This is something we want to change." But he said Brunei is equally anxious to avoid the problems of tourism.
 9. "We have learned from our friends, from other countries, what not to do," he said. "If we do not control our tourism industry, our way of life in Brunei would be in danger."
31. The main idea of this reading is that _____.
- A. Brunei is opposed to ecotourism
